More than just an e-mail address.

An e-mail address at the University of Basel grants you access to a number of different online services offered by the University of Basel, other Swiss universities or SWITCH, the Internet service provider of Swiss universities.

Swiss university network AAI

Many online services can be accessed by means of the Unibas e-mail address via the Authentication and Authorization Infrastructure (AAI). AAI is an association of all academic institutions in Switzerland under the auspices of SWITCH. All participating institutions have agreed to trust one another with respect to their user logins. With their AAI login (from the network of their home university), every member of a Swiss higher education institution has access to the relevant integrated online resources, such as the ADAM learning platform, the movo.ch mobile voting system, the SWITCHtube video portal and the cloud service for Swiss universities, SWITCHdrive. Once they have logged into the AAI, they can use all available resources (single sign on).

For information on AAI and the legal and technical framework, please visit:
<https://switch.ch/aai>

SWITCH edu-ID

In order to use the AAI online services independently and permanently, you can easily apply for a SWITCH edu-ID. This means that even after completion of a degree or after securing employment, permanent access is granted to the resources and offers within the AAI university network.

Access to the intranet via VPN

The VPN client is used to authenticate an individual user in the network of the University of Basel and grants this user access to the university network (intranet). This enables them to access university resources, such as electronic magazines held in the library of the University of Basel, even from home. The VPN client must be installed once and activated every time a connection is established.

Network access using Eduroam

Eduroam (education roaming) is a global network that grants members of the participating research and educational institutions free Internet access on their respective campus. This requires merely an up-to-date certificate as well as the Unibas e-mail address and password (AAI login).
